of whom carried empty coat sleeves, joyously obeyed the command to "forward, march."

An old negro, giving his name as J. A. Bivens, wearing a badge of Camp Wilcox, Birmingham, Ala, and clad in gray, was the center of an interesting crowd while he told stories of the Virginia battles. He went into the Confederate service in 1861, he said, with Capt. Tom Bartlett of the Georgia troops, and at the first battle of Manassas carried Gen. Tyler off the field after he was desperately wounded.

The negro himself was shot, he stated, in the leg in that battle and still carries the bullet. At the surrender at Appomatix he was first lieutenant in the 6th Alabama, he said, explaining that the losses had been so heavy that several of the original commands had been consolidated.

One of the most feted "southern beauties" in Washington this week is Miss Louise Carolyn Morgan, granddaughter of a famous Confederate chieftain, whose home famous Confederate chieftain, whose home is in Columbus, Miss., and who is sponsor for the Mississippi division. Members of the Mississippi delegation in Congress gave a dinner in her honor last night in the Raleigh Hotel. Members of the Mississippi Society in Washington have arranged a dinner for her tonight. She has had at least three social engagements for every day she will be in Washington. But in spite of these social activities Miss Morgan has crowded in five hours a day in the Sons of Confederate Veterans headquarters, where she is in charge of filing the registration cards. Commander Brockman, who is in charge of the registration, says she is one of the most efficient workers he has ever had.

"As to the further suggestion that mail matter of a non-neutral character is sent to Germany by way of Mexico, it is enough to state that there is no means of sending such matter from Mexico to Germany, and official notice was given some time since by the postal authorities of Mexico that it was useless to deposit mail for the central powers in the post office, as it could not and would not be sent out of the committy."

His one regret was that the school children of the city were not kept at their schools yesterday, in order that they might have witnessed the scene. "The registration would have made patriotic impression upon their young minds which would never be lost," Maj.

In one case a British, ship was sunk and eleven members of the crew were killed by shell fire. In the second case, after torpedoing the ship, the German fired a surface torpedo through a small boat which was carrying the crew to a rescuing steamer and killed all on board.

The conference was held to discuss means of carrying out the resolution of the executive committee of the union, refusing to permit members of the union to man any ship conveying pacifists to Stockholm or Petrograd unless they signed a guarantee that they would insist on restitution for murder and destruction committed by German submarines. Two delegates have been appointed to go to Stockholm and Petrograd and present copies of the resolution to all international labor representatives and socialists they meet.
